New Mexico Research Symposium

Contact event host for Specific Times

The New Mexico Research Symposium (NMRS) will be hosted October 19, 2024, by the New Mexico Academy of Science (NMAS), held in conjunction with the New Mexico Science Teachers' Association (NMSTA) Fall Conference, and collaboratively organized with New Mexico's Established Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (NM EPSCoR), taking place at the University of New Mexico. NMRS is an annual conference with oral presentations, a poster competition, and outstanding science teacher awards. The conference is geared to undergraduate and graduate students from New Mexico's colleges and universities and to science teachers and faculty members. In 2023, seventy-three undergraduate and graduate students participated and were joined by thirty-nine teachers, faculty members, and symposium partners. First, second, and third place awards are given to students in the undergraduate and graduate categories. Awards co-sponsored by NMAS and the local American Chemical Society chapter recognize two outstanding science teachers from across the state each year.

The Institute Occurs Just Prior to CTEBVI, April 10-13, 2025, San Francisco Airport Marriott Burlingame, CA

What to Expect

Connect with other professionals around the country about teaching STEM content to the blind or visually impaired.

CTEBVI will take place starting April 10th, 2025 in Burlingame, if you would like to attend that also. Registration for CTBVI will need to be made separately at <https://www.ctebvi.org/>. Registration usually opens a couple of months prior to the conference.

Goals

To build community and a support system among teachers of the visually impaired. Often, teachers feel isolated and don't have easy access to other teachers for guidance and support.

To provide professional development opportunities. The "POSB Institutes for Instruction" would include a training component, focusing on a particular area of instruction to inspire teachers and provide them with tools to improve their instructional practices. To establish online communities for individual disciplines in order to provide ease in communication and to share documents and other materials related to instruction. booking your room as part of our block ($95/night plus taxes and fees, including free breakfast).
