Leadership Connections | Small Program, Big Impact

Virtual Event - Zoom

02:00 PM - 03:00 PM EST

If you struggle with insufficient capacity, whether it's staff, funding, or engagement, this Leadership Connections is for you! Twenty years ago, Leadership Lynchburg was a single program with a 'one size trying to fit all' curriculum. Today, Leadership Lynchburg has grown from this one program to three, with an active and engaged core of alumni who ensure that quality and impact are at the forefront of all that is done.

About the Speaker: Christine Kennedy has been program director for the Chamber-based Leadership Lynchburg since 2000. She was hired to overhaul a struggling program that had been in existence since 1977. Since that time and due largely to the credit she gives to ALP, she has built the organization from one Flagship program to three programs with a strong volunteer leadership structure all while navigating the other aspects of her Chamber responsibilities. She is also a recipient of ALP's Preceptor Award and is an instructor for ALP's Certified Community Leadership Practitioner (CCLP) designation.

Connecting Across Difference
Omni Providence Hotel
1 W Exchange St
Providence, RI 02903
10:00 AM - 02:00 PM EST

Presented by Civity, a national nonprofit organization dedicated to supporting community leaders who want to create a welcoming culture, this workshop will help them build 'social muscle' in their community, cultivating relationships of respect, empathy and trust across difference.

Civity is a national nonprofit organization dedicated to supporting leaders who want to create a welcoming culture to more successfully address community challenges. This workshop offers skills that leaders from various sectors can use to build social trust in their agencies and work by intentionally cultivating relationships of respect and empathy across differences. Civity scales culture change by partnering with established and emerging leaders in organizations and communities. Civity gives leaders permission, intentionality, and skills to bring this valuable relational element to what they do. When community leaders integrate civity into their work, they build social trust and relational infrastructure to make progress toward their specific goals: Relationality is the secret sauce that deepens and enhances what they are already doing.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

Participants take away actionable strategies that bring cross-cutting social science research to real life. These strategies and skills can also easily be incorporated into existing gatherings. Because the workshop takeaways are centered on what people can do in their everyday lives,— the relationship- and trust-building continues long after the workshop ends.

WHO IT'S FOR

This course is open to all interested participants, even if you're not attending the full ALP National Conference.

Facilitators: Lucy Hancock and Malka Ranjana Kopell, Civity

Lucy Hancock is an entrepreneur, a coach, and a Civity trainer. At Civity, she trains leaders to intentionally build relationships in their workplaces, communities, and beyond. When we create authentic and positive person-to-person connections across difference, we transform our communities into places where everyone knows that they belong.

Malka Ranjana Kopell is Co-Founder and CEO of Civity. As a bi-racial (South Asian and white) girl growing up in a pre-tech Silicon Valley she learned early on how to find common ground with those who called out her difference. As the Valley grew wealthier, she noticed how many others less fortunate were – and are – being rendered invisible, and dedicated her life to try to create a community where everybody is seen and heard. In 1990 Malka founded the consulting nonprofit organization Community Focus to facilitate more effective implementation of public policies by increasing community participation. She also served as a program officer for the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, developing and managing grants in the areas of conflict resolution and civic engagement, and was the founding managing director of the Center on Philanthropy and Civil Society at Stanford University. Currently, in addition to Civity, Malka is a senior mediator/facilitator at California State University, Sacramento, where she works on a variety of issues ranging from groundwater management to addressing homelessness.. She has a bachelor's degree from Stanford University and a master's degree in public policy from Harvard University.

Leading with and Leveraging Polarities: A Both/And Approach to Flourishing Individuals, Teams, and Organizations
Omni Providence Hotel
1 W Exchange St
Providence, RI 02903

10:00 AM - 02:00 PM EST

With continuing conflict and division within organizations in the United States and the world, both/and thinking addresses big, complex issues without being overwhelmed. In this highly interactive workshop, participants will take a deep dive into the mechanics of polarity thinking so you can bring this strategic process back to your respective community leadership organization. Polarities are pairs of values, competencies, or strategic objectives that seem to oppose one another but are actually interdependent. Common leadership polarities are Accountability and Support, Individual and Team, Get the Job Done and Build Relationships, Continuity (Stability) and Transformation (Change), Justice and Mercy, Intent and Impact, and Direct and Empower. Also, polarity work supplements approaches to DEI and organizational strategic planning.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

You will become competent in identifying, mapping out, and leveraging common polarities in the community. You will

See - Understand what polarities are and how they work. You will identify polarities that have the greatest impact on whether they achieve their preferred future;

Map - Build polarity maps for each of the key polarities;

Leverage - Identify those action steps and early warnings that will ensure that the polarity achieves desired results and sustains success;

Examine how to integrate polarity thinking in various areas of your personal and professional life.

WHO IT'S FOR

This course is open to all interested participants, even if you're not attending the full ALP National Conference.
